Establishing lush, healthy lawn grasses is a labor of love when you aspire to own a thick, beautiful lawn. Proper lawn maintenance, mowing and fertilization all help achieve your goal, but success also rests on the grass itself. Whether you're establishing a new lawn from scratch or overseeding an existing lawn, matching the best cool- or warm-season grasses to your grass planting zone is essential to the task.

COOL-SEASON GRASSES

thrive in northern regions with moderate summers and cool spring and fall seasons.

But they can struggle in southern heat.

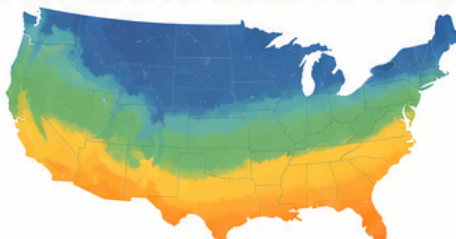

WARM-SEASON GRASSES

flourish where summer temperatures run extra high, but they can't withstand northern winters.

1. KNOW YOUR REGION & PLANTING ZONE

Use the USDA Plant Hardiness Zone Map as a guide. Your zone helps determine which grasses will survive the winter and thrive through the summer.

USDA HARDINESS ZONE

- 3-4 Coolest
- 5-6 Cool
- 7 Transition
- 8-9 Warm
- 10-11 Warmest

2. CHOOSE THE RIGHT GRASS TYPE

COOL-SEASON GRASSES (Best for Zones 3-7)

Ideal for northern and transition zones.
Grows best in spring and fall.

Kentucky
Bluegrass

Perennial
Ryegrass

Tall
Fescue

Fine
Fescue

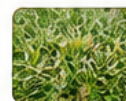

Great for durability, traffic tolerance and beautiful green color.

WARM-SEASON GRASSES (Best for Zones 8-11)

Ideal for southern zones.
Grows best in late spring through summer.

Bermuda
Grass

Zoysia
Grass

St. Augustine
Grass

Buffalo
Grass

Heat-loving, drought-tolerant and stays green in summer.

3. CONSIDER YOUR LAWN'S NEEDS

Sun Exposure
Some grasses prefer full sun, others handle shade better.

Foot Traffic
Choose durable varieties if your lawn gets a lot of use.

Drought Tolerance
Warm-season grasses excel in dry, hot conditions.

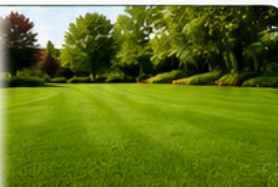

Maintenance Level
Some grasses need more mowing, watering and fertilization than others.

THE BOTTOM LINE

The right grass seed for your region is the foundation of a healthy, thriving lawn. Choose wisely, plant properly and enjoy green results all season long!
